

Highlights

- Decoupled taxonomic and functional response to disturbance in a tropical forest
- Disturbance intensity determined taxonomic but not functional diversity response
- Intermediate Disturbance Hypothesis only validated regarding taxonomic diversity
- High functional redundancy mitigates disturbance impacts on functional diversity
- Ongoing but slow diversity recovery following disturbance